The Tent Caterpillar

Forest tent caterpillar outbreak, developing in the Sault Ste. Marie area since late April and recently reaching peak proportions in Minnesota, is not expected to reach a climax in the eastern upper peninsula until mid-June.

This is the report of conservation department staff forester Norman F. Smith who points out that this is the sixth year of the bug buildup and will be the third year of heavy defoliation of trees. He says natural controls, mainly starvation and parasites, could help control the worm in Michigan by next year.

Michigan's current bug invasion may produce a bigger leaf-chewing horde than last year when millions of them stripped foliage primarily in the eastern upper peninsula. Some infestation is anticipated in the northern tip of the lower peninsula.

Smith says the food supply could be exhausted in many places before the bugs mature, resulting in mass starvation. Caterpillars now range in size from one-half to three-fourths inches, when full grown are one and one-half to two inches in length.

Seldom injuring farm crops, the bugs are a spectacular nuisance at the height of their invasion when they have stripped trees and commence roaming for more food.

Individual spraying attempted after the end of May will be too late to be of any benefit to the landowner. Cost of aerial spraying of all infested areas would be extremely high and uncalled for because of no greater threat to timber.

Seeing ourseleves as others see us wouldn't do much good. We wouldn't believe it anyway.

The reason why worry kills more people than work is that more people people worry than work.

Longest and Best

TOURIST SEASON FOR WEST MICHIGAN

Prospects for the "longest and best" tourist season for West Michigan "never were better", according to Chester C. Wells, secretary-manager of the West Michigan Tourist and Resort Association.

While there never has been any "official" beginning date for the vacation season in West Michigan, opening of the fishing season has been generally accepted as the start. The April 26 opening for the taking of all species of fish except black bass this year and "exceptionally fine weather conditions since then certainly have provided the incentive needed to give all of Michigan a longer vacation season," Wells remarked.

It was estimated that possibly 80 per cent or more of the resorts of West Michigan were open for business over the Memorial Day week-end, assuring accommodations of any type for anyone seeking them.

At the same time the Michigan department ofconservation disclosed that all state parks were open and ready for use. There never has been an official opening date for the parks either, although the season always has been considered from Memorial day to Labor day, with most of the parks open earlier and remaining open later.

Wells based his forecast for a good vacation season on records in his office and reports from other agencies through the 31-county territory served by the association. Records here disclose "a decided increase over any previous year" in the number of inquiries from prospective vacationers. Chambers of commerce and other tourist information offices throughout west Michigan report similar gains. Most resort operators of the region have reported a greater number of reservations than previously at this time and some resorts have reported near-capacity reservations for part of June, an unprecedented situation in other years. There also has been a greater demand for copies of CAREFREE DAYS IN WEST MICHIGAN, the 148-page tourist guide for the territory.

Travel in west Michigan during May has been up, even with the recent oil strike which kept many motorists off the highways, Wells reported. One barometer for travel in the territory is the traffic recorded at Mackinaw City, lower peninsula terminal for the state's Straits of Mackinac carferry service.

Between Jan. 1 and May 15 the number of vehicles carried on the ferries increased 16 per cent over previous high in the 30-year history of the service. The Michigan highway department reports 95,388 motorcars carried, compared with 82,037 in the similar period of 1951, the previous record year.

"We can't crediat the weather the early opening of the fishing season alone for the exceptionally favorable outlook for the tourist business this year," Wells commented. "For 35 years the West Michigan Tourist and Resort Association, which is supported by business houses, resorts and others in the 31 counties of the region, has carried on an unrelenting campaign of promotion that has established the area as one of the nation's most popular vacation territories.

"In addition to the work of our association, there has been the promotion of numerous chambers of commerce, other civic organizations and individual resort operators and business men throughout territory, which has done much to advertise and publicize west Michigan as a vacationland.

"Our combined efforts now are paying off handsomely. Tourism now ranks first among the industries of west Michigan, only because of a determined effort to place it there.

"But we must have good resorts, fine business places, a general hospitable welcome for our guests from everyone and continued promotional efforts to retain our patronage in this highly-competitive industry."

FARM FACTS from your County Agricultural Agent

Ed. Rebman, Co. Agr'l Agent

Two new systems of making hay are interesting a greater number of Charlevoix county farmers than ever before, says Ed Rebman, county agricultural agent.

The two methods are grass silage and chopped hay—sometimes referred to as now-finishing. D. L. Clanhan, of the Michigan State College farm crop department, says that both involve use of the field forage harvester and designed with the main purpose of saving labor and saving quality in the harvested crop.

Agent Rebman agrees with Clanahan that no "best method" for all farms and situations is available. A silo is necessary for the grass silage and a mow-drier for chopped hay, in addition to the field harvester.

The objectives of saving the crop from field spoilage, leaf loss and loss of feeding value are met by both methods. Making grass silage almost completely avoids field spoilage and leaf losses. Mow-finishing helps get the job done before the crop becomes over-mature and takes some of the weather hazard out of the job because field exposure time is reduced.

Mow-finishing of cropped hay enables the operators to have feed of lower fiber, higher protein and higher total digestible nutrients, Clanahan concludes.

Horizontal silos are not new to many Michigan farms, though they have not used extensively in recent years. County agricultural agent Ed Rebman reports a new interest in this method of preserving forage.

The horizonal silo can be used either for permanent or temporary storage for silage. Most horizontal silos are at least partially dug into the ground. Where a side hill is available, the horizontal silo can be constructed.

R. L. Maddex, Michigan State College extension agricultural engineer, advises that some type of material should be used to cover the side walls of permanent horizontal silos. Planks, preferable creosoted, field stones plastered to give a smooth inside surface, and reinforced concrete, serve very well for this purpose.

Location of the silo so that there is surface drainage away from the silo is important. The practice of locating the silo away from the barn in order to obtain the right ground level is being adopted by many farmers. Silage is then fed outside in bunks near the entrance to the horizontal silo.

There is a definite width to height ratio if minium spoilage is to result. About a foot of silage per week should be fed across the face of the silo to prevent excessive spoilage.

The Servicemen's Letter

Hi Fellas:

This is Monday night following Memorial Day. We are just now getting caught up from the extra rush of visitors and also the months end business. The old town sure was full of strangers and old familiar faces this week end. They just seemed to flock in.

Let's see if I can remember some of them. That is, some of them that I just saw and didn't get too much of a chance to talk with. There were Gale and Ervin Murphy, Bob Dixon, Charles Dufore, Dale McWatters, Niles Hill, Ed Lord, Paul Bennett, Richard Rusnell, Clifford Schultz, Bud Strehl, and I guess that's all. If I've missed someone I hereby apologize before you get a chance to rib me about it.

Gale and Ervin Murphy were having a big time together last weekend. It's not too often that the two brothers get a chance to go out together and they were making the most of it.

Dale McWatters informed me that he had been home since the 20th of May on another furlough. It seems that he had so much time stored up that he was threatened with losing some of it so they sent home for another stretch. He's going back to Custer this week.

Ed Lord and Jim Nachazel will be in summer training soon. Jim is scheduled to make an aviation-amphibious cruise as part of his Naval Reserve Officer's Training Corps program at Marquette University, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He will go to Little Creek, Virginia and to Corpus Christi, Texas on this cruise. Jim, who is a sophomore in the Marquette college of engineering, is one of 200 men in the Naval ROTC at the University.

Bud Strehl keeps hopping back and forth between East Jordan and Grosse Isle. Seems as though he must have a pretty good berth just now to get so much time off.

A new man among us this week is Pvt Merle J. Wilson, US 55 272 236, Co E, 86th Inf Regt, 10 th Inf Div, Fort Riley, Kansas. Jack is in the beginning of a 16 weeks basic training course there at Riley. His basic started on May 26th. So far he has had the luck to see the Morris twins. There are a lot more of you men in that camp — look him up and make him at home with you.

We've received a stop mailing order from Charles Dufore who was up to this time down in Sampson AFB, New York. Can it be that he is due for overseas? I'll try to see him and let you all know about it next week.

Here's another notice of change of address with no explanation attached. WOJG Murray R. Nelson, W-2146455, is now with the Casual Officers Section, Personnel Center, Camp Kilmer, New Jersey. Can it be that they are shipping you over again, Murray? Write me and give us the lowdown, will you?

I have information here that Ivan and Herbert Chew have entered the service and are taking basic at Indiantown Gap Military Reservation but I do not as yet have their complete addresses. If anyone can give them to me will you do so. We would like to have them receiving this paper.

A letter from Earl Bennett reads as follows: "I'll drop you a line and let you know where I am now. I've been here in Shepard Air Force Base for ten days now but I just got moved into my permanent squad. Our A & E School starts Wednesday the 28th and lasts for 140 academic days.

'Is there anyone besides Dean McPherson down here at this hot and dusty place? My new address is A/3C Earl R. Bennett, AF 16 404 211, 3751 Stu Trng Sqd, Barracks 880, Sheppard AFB, Texas."

Yes, Earl, there is Ronald B. Kenney over in Sqd 3760, Barracks 764. But I guess he is the only one besides Dean.

Gale Murphy expects to be out in January. He has only about seven months to go now and if they don't take him for overseas duty in the next month he won't get it. Gale says that when he gets out can't come too soon to suit him. He's no 20 year man.

Jake Lundy is now a civilian. He received his discharge on Thursday, May 29th at 1:00 p.m. Jake is staying in Colorado Springs this summer during the resort season. It seems there is lots of work down there this time of the year. Jake expects to be home here in the fall.

It has been reported to me that Norman Beal is in Camp Chaffee, Arkansas taking his basic. I do not have his address for you now but will give it to you next week.

Oh, say, I just remembered that Pete Lundy (Jakes brother) has passed his physical and expects to be called in someime the last of this summer.

Gerald Olson and Albert Chanda will probably get it this summer physicals a short time ago.

to take part in the parade before sometime too. They both passed

Bob Anderson left for San Diego on May 30th. He had time going. He expects to be in Dago for quite a spell now.

Well, That's all for now.

So Long,

"Jake" Snyder

NATURE'S FIBERS PROVIDE COMFORT

Man-made fibers shouldn't dim the homemaker's eyes to some of nature's wonderful fibers, advises Marjorie Eastman, extension specialist in textiles, clothing and related arts for Michigan State College's school of home economics.

The advent of the summer season should increase our appreciation of such a fiber as cotton, Miss Eastman believes. "Think of the impressive qualities we could attribute to cotton." she says. "It stands heat and washing; doesn't melt or strech when ironed; absorbs moisture; and resists alkalis."

Cotton's toughness and durability make it the logical choice yeararound for work clothes, house dresses and many children's garments. Cotton dresses appear in all forms from casual sportswear to festive and expensive evening gowns.

Summer cottons are interesting for their textures, the clothing specialist points out. A variety of weaves and finishes permits any number of pleasing materials.

Smooth, glazed surfaces, as in taffetized cotton prints or chambrays are amang the best sellers. They are shiny and crisp and shed dust and dirt. Make the glaze is guaranteed to be permanent, however.

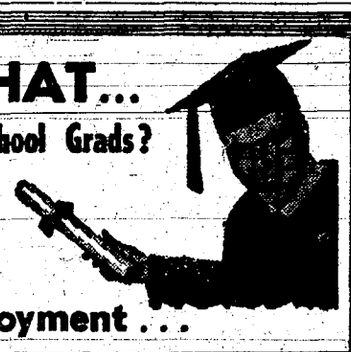

Embossed fabrics resist crushing and soiling. They make fine play clothes, sun rdesses and street wear. Again, make sure the embossed pattern is permanent.

Any one of a number of cotton materials has a place in the summer wardrobe—calico, gingham pique, denim, and others. Each has its own particular advantage.

A final suggestion offered by Miss Eastman for summer coolness and comfort is the variety of cotton sheers which can be fitted into any warm weather wardrobe.

Political control of Michigan's correction system has bred unrest among inmates at the Southern Michigan Prison at Jackson, according to Garret Heyns, warden at Ionia reformatory and a former corrections commissioner.

Heynes testified to this effect before legislative finance committees at Lansing. Riot damage at the prison exceeded $1,500,000.

His allegation was another "hot potato" tossed into the lap of Governor G. Mennen Williams who, like former Governor Kim Sigler, has advocated more appointive power for the governor to run state government.

As quoted in the press, Heyns said:

"When the director is appointed by the governor and is a political appointee the nervosness of subordinates cannot be eliminated. It even filters down to the inmates.

Heyns' solution is a return to the five-man corrections commission law whereby prisons were taken out of control of the governor and were run by persons "chosen for the jobs on the basis of their training and experience in corrections work."

An obvious target is Earnest C. Brooks of Holland, Williams' appointee as corrections director. Brooks, a Democrat, is in the insurance business.

The so-called "model" correction law, interestingly enough, was a product of a Democratic governor—Frank Murphy in 1937. It continued on the statute books 10 years until Governor Sigler convinced the legislature that the governor should be responsible. Sigler took great pride in his appointment of a career man, Joseph Sanford, former deputy at Atlanta's federal prison.

When the voters' protest tide against Sigler swept unknown young Williams into the governor's chair, Sanford was promptly replaced by Williams' own appointee, Mr. Brooks. Brooks is a successful business man and a former member of the State Senate. Sanford died in 1951.

The situation thus has some contradictory aspects. Heynes criticizes political control of prisons through a Democratic governor's appointment of a one-man commission. His solution is a return to a model law inaugurated by a Democratic governor. If a Republican legislature agrees with his recommendation, it will be admitting its error in accepting a Republican governor's solution: One-man control. And so it does.

Who's right? Who's wrong? In the game of politics the answer depends largely on which side of the party fence you happen to be. So roll your own!

It is comparatively easy to create and build up a new department in state government, once the legislature accedes to public pressure and appropiates money to hire manpower.

It is quite another thing, however, to get the equivalent of results through co-ordination of existing governmental agencies.

An illustration at point is Michigan's civil defense program, a new postwar activity of state government. Last year this department spent $1,073,000, one million dollars of which went for blood typing. For this year's budget the governor asked $3,000,000, a good 50 per cent more. The legislature, trying to cope with a rising state deficit, granted only $271,575.

Gen. Lester J. Maitland, civil defense director, has practically shelved ambitious plans to continue blood typing for an atomic disaster, expand the ground observer plan, buy fire trucks and medical supply trucks and set up special programs for key areas such as the Soo Locks.

By dire necessity he is now resorting to an appeal to existing state agencies for coordination. The health and highway departments, for example, are asked to help carry some of the load through their own manpower and funds.

Another illustration is the state department for economic development. Here is a super-chamber of commerce, fathered by former Governor Sigler, to help build business and industry in Michigan.

Government again intervened to supplant private leadership and private action, and all at the taxpayers' expense. The test of a new state agency, as we see it, is this: Is it needed? Can we afford it? Are we getting our money's worth?

A tax brevity: The state constitution says, in effect, that the legislature shall balance the budget. But Gov. Williams vetoed $18,000,000 of the Republican $28,500,000 program, creating a defict of some $20,000,000 to be tacked on to the $65,000,000 accumulated deficit.

Who is now responsible for the unbalanced budget — Governor Williams or the Legislature?

Sen. Frank Andrews (R-Hillman) says, "My position is to vote no on any attempts to balance the budget. We did our legislative duty and the governor vetoed it. He won't get a chance to veto the beer tax, for it's coming up."

Sen. Leo H. Roy (R-Hancock) said, "We won't solve any of our problems until we bounce Williams — He's just a jinx."

C. J. McNeill, legislative comptroller says quietly, "They've authorized expenditures of more than $300,000,000. That's law and you know it as well as I. Their only answer is to find more money—somewhere."

Governor Williams' solution is simple and familiar. Distribute the wealth by taxing employers' profits. FDR applied this principle of European socialism nearly 20 years ago. He called it the "New Deal."

A by-product of increased taxes and government spending, both impelled in part by the cost of World War II and the present cold war against communism, is inflation. Socialism and inflation go hand in hand.

The aveage hourly rate of Detroit production workers last March was 2.04. A 40-hour workweek meant earnings of $81.60 — as an AVERAGE! That is inflation.

If further priming of the inflation pump is effected in 1952 under political direction, the illusion of good times will be even greater.

Governor Williams' greatest trump card is his championship of the under-dog, the "common man" whose welfare he would improve, at every opportunity, primarily at the expense of the profits of "big business' and under the illusion of prosperity.

It is a political mirage hard to overcome.

And the Republican legislative leaders know it.

If Michigan has more deficits, vetoed "consumer tax" bills, or who's to blame? The governor who the legislature which "refuses" to tax employers' profits? The show-down is just about at that level. Take your choice.

Early Opening Argued

Up and down Michigan trout streams on the opening weekend fishermen argued: Had the early opening on inland lakes taken some of the pressure off the trout streams? Or did you hold with the school that contended trout fishermen couldn't ever be wooed away from the thrill of that long-awaited opening week end?

From our own survey the opening day parade looked just about as long and populous as ever, but that's not the real test. The next month will probably show slackening interest in trout because anglers will be diverted to lakes closer to home—at least that's the belief of our Conservation Department's fish division. And thus the terrific drain on Michigan trout will be somewhat relieved.

Put-And-Take Planting

Just how severe this drain has become can be dramatically demonstrated by the heavy planting program required to keep trout fishermen happy—today. In our so called "put-and-take" system, about 250,000 legal-sized trout are planted just before the season opens. The fish are well scattered over hundreds of miles of streams. A surprisingly large percentage of them are caught on the opening week end. During the balance of the season another 750,000—all 7" or better—are planted, and they, too, are over anxious to take flies or bait [illegible] their way.

Costly Project

It costs real money to hatch a trout, raise him to legal length, transport him from the hatcheries and release him in a stream that may be many miles away. The figure is said to be about 40c per fish. On a million-fish basis the bill is a little alarming—$400,000.

Whatever fisheries experts think of the idea is neither here nor there. Sportsmen apparently demand it. Resort operators like it, too. So it's likely to continue for awhile. The day may come however, when the picture will change, and we'll go back to nature's way of maintaining fish populations.

New Rules Point Way

Sometime in the not too far distant future many of our best trout streams may be restricted to fly-fishing only. The new regulations for 1952 point the way. With fly-fishing-only allowed in certain streams, and the limit cut to an adequate ten per day our elaborate and costly trout-planting program may gradually become unnecessary. The money saved may be spent more wisely on stream improvement necessitated by erosion resulting from over-zealous lumber operations. That's where man can help nature. But when it comes to helping nature maintain trout population by raising and releasing a million fish a year, man fails to meet the challenge in more ways than one. If you don't believe it, compare the flavor of a hatchery trout and one of nature's children of the [illegible] you'll be surprised!

THE AMERICAN WAY

But the aroma (?) lingers on

The elderly stock broker, age 75, carried his 19-year old bride over the threshold. He introduced her to his household staff, and later asked his chauffeur what he thought of the new mistress. The chauffeur replied, "She's a beautiful young lady, sir, but I hate to see a man start out on a day's work so late in the afternoon."

Seeding Failures Reduced By Good Cultural Methods

Better seedings in oats and barley are possible by observing a few tips from farm crops specialists at Michigan State College. Good cultural methods, plus a new method of seeding help do the job.

Soil should be right, they say, with a pH (acidity rating) of six or above. Your county agricultural agent can help you check the pH of the soil. If pH is below six, lime should be added, especially for alfalfa. Use 400 pounds of 0-20-20 fertilizer per acre at time of seeding.

The drill should be set so the seed falls behind the disk. Michigan Agricultural Experiment Station tests in 1951 got twice as good a stand when seed fell behind disks as when it fall in front of the disks. When dropped in front, seed was covered too deeply.

Cultipacking after seeding is a valuable practice, too.

Band seeding is a new method of improving seeding in oats and barley. To do it, add a piece of garden hose two and one-half feet long to tubes leading from small seeding attachment, and wire the hose back of the disks so seed falls on top of the ground. It should fall eight inches behind disks to get seed directly above fertilizer for a quick boost in seeding growth.

Band seeding is especially valuable on poor soils or when the season is dry, the farm crops specialists say.

Experiments at East Lansing gave a 43 percent better stand of alfalfa by using band seeding as compared to conventional drill seeding.

Taking time to insure good seeding helps reduce costly failures. Seeding failures result in loss of expensive seed, soil erosion, lack of high quality roughage for livestock and breaking up of planned rotations with reduction in yield of following crops.

Weather Hazards Reduced With New Hay-Harvesting Methods

Newer hay-harvesting methods which reduce weather hazards are becoming more common on Michigan farms, resulting in higher quality hays, according to Karl A. Vary, Michigan State College agricultural economist, who has studied the situation.

The weather problem in field-curing hay to 25 percent or less is obvious. To field-cure hay to a moisture content of 25 percent requires about 15 to 20 hours of sunshine. That means about one and a half to two days of clear weather.

According to U. S. Weather Bureau Records at East Lansing, the probable number of days without rainfall during the first two weeks in June is about two to three days in a row. You can count on about one to two clear days in a row during the second two weeks in June, and three clear days in a row during the first week in July. These figures were compiled by Vary from records from 1918 to 1951.

With a hay crusher the number f hours of sunshine required to ield-cure hay is cut to eight to en. A barn drier will cut hours f sunshine required to six to ight. And farmers who make rass silage need only one to hree hours of sunshine to cure heir hay.

The dry matter loss for the hay oader method is 24 percent, for he hay crusher it is 21 percent or the barn drier 16 percent, and or grass silage, 15 percent. These ry matter loss figures are from ime of cutting until time of feed-ng.

Peak Lamprey Runs Expected In Late May or Early June

With peak lamprey runs expected in late May and early June, conservation department plan is to inventory inland waters where one or more lamprey species might be spawing or scarring fish.

Main objective is to determine whether or not the sea lamprey, Great Lakes fish menace in recent years, is becoming established in inland lakes. In past years some fishermen have mistaken other eel-shaped creatures, the brook, silver and chestnut lampreys, for the sea lamprey. The other three are not believed to be especially harmful to fish populations.

Fishermen can assist by reporting lampreys or possible lamprey-scarred fish to the nearest department representative or to Truman T. Guard, Grayling state fish hatchery. Anglers are advised that the sea lamprey is the larger of the four species, with the adult averaging about 18 inches in size. Some may be as long as 30inches.

The department's fisheries research institute has a list of 19 lakes reported possessing the parasitic sea lamprey.

In Mullet lake, for example, the lamprey is believed to have migrated from Lake Huron by way of the Cheboygan river. Reaching the lake, the lamprey is suspected of moving into smaller tributary streams to spawn and then returning to Mullet where conditions may be satisfactor for it to remain and complete its life cycle. Movement pattern may be similar in other lakes.

Forage Crops Backbone Of Dairy Feeding

Better and cheaper grassland crops for pasture and feeding make up the back bone of any livestock program, especially dairy. Dr. Earl Weaver, head of the dairy department at Michigan State college, believes dairymen should study ways for maxmium utilization of forage crops.

Too much of our forage crops put into hay does not carry the maximum nutrients available because of losses due to leaching leaching, leafshattering and other damage. The dairy department head believes farmers would give closer attention to their harvesting problems if they realized more fully the economy of hay and pasture.

Recent studies of the costs of feeding a hundred pounds of total digestible nutrients show that alfalfa-brome pasture cost 29 cents compared with corn grain at 78 cents. When alfalfa was harvested as hay, the cost was only 78 cents compared with oats at $1.38.

Diary cattle can obtain nearly two-thirds of their necessary nutrients from forage crops, Dr. Weave related.

He suggested that dairymen endeavor to attend one of the six regional Grass Day programs being held in Michigan's lower peninsula during June. Local county agricultural agents can give complete information on the events where demonstrations will be held on seeding, harvesting and utilization of forage crops.

Michigan State College authorities remind that grassland Farming does not mean that all or most of the agricultural land be seeded to grass. They believe it should be employed in the farming program to complement the cropping system, so that each acre of land is put to its best use in producing the necessary feed supplies for the livestock maintained on the fam.

Choose Right Time For Small Grain Weed Control Work

Many small grain fields in Michigan can be improved, and in some cases actually saved, by spraying them with 2,4-D to control weeds, says B. R. Churchill of the Michigan State College farm crops department.

Not all species of weeds are controlled by 2,4-D but wild mustards, wild radish, ragweed and lambsquarter are not dificult to kill if the 2,4-D is applied at the right time and in the right amounts.

Small grains, including oats, barley, and wheat are more susceptible to injury from 2,4-D at some stages of growth than at others. Greatest injury comes when seedlings are only two or three inches high. They should not be sprayed at this stage.

When small grains are six to eight inches high, they are rather tolerant to 2,4-D and young weeds are most susceptible, Churchill says. Later the weeds will be more tolerant and difficult to kill.

A maximum on one-quarter to one-half pound acid equivalent per acre should be used. The lower rate would be for the ester formulations of 2,4-D. Your county agricultural agent can explain 2,4-D formulations to you and advise the best type for your weed problem.

If legume seeding is made with the grain crop, the problem becomes more complicated. The salts of 2,4-D rather than the ester formulations should be used at rates not to exceed one-quarter pound acid equivalent per acre if red, alsike, or ladino clover is the legume.

If the seeding is alfalfa, a dinitro selective spray would be safer for the alfalfa than 2,4-D, Churchill recommends. Sweet clover seedings usually will be inpured considerable by either chemical.

Spraying small grain fields containing a sweet clover seeding is not advised.

Small areas of quackgrass can be spot sprayed with the compound TCA and a knapsack sprayer. Such treatment, however, will kill the small grain crop.

The Tent Caterpillar

Forest tent caterpillar outbreak, developing in the Sault Ste. Marie area since late April and recently reaching peak proportions in Minnesota, is not expected to reach a climax in the eastern upper peninsula until mid-June.

This is the report of conservation department staff forester Norman F. Smith who points out that this is the sixth year of the bug buildup and will be the third year of heavy defoliation of trees. He says natural controls, mainly starvation and parasites, could help control the worm in Michigan by next year.

Michigan's current bug invasion may produce a bigger leaf-chewing horde than last year when millions of them stripped foliage primarily in the eastern upper peninsula. Some infestation is anticipated in the northern tip of the lower peninsula.

Smith says the food supply could be exhausted in many places before the bugs mature, resulting in mass starvation. Caterpillars now range in size from one-half to three-fourths inches, when full grown are one and one-half to two inches in length.

Seldom injuring farm crops, the bugs are a spectacular nuisance at the height of their invasion when they have stripped trees and commence roaming for more food.

Individual spraying attempted after the end of May will be too late to be of any benefit to the landowner. Cost of aerial spraying of all infested areas would be extremely high and uncalled for because of no greater threat to timber.

Seeing ourseleves as others see us wouldn't do much good. We wouldn't believe it anyway.

The reason why worry kills more people than work is that more people people worry than work.

Congressman Potter has announced his candidancy for the United States Senate, but he had promised to come long before this was known. I think this will be an outstanding talk.

Mr. Carl Nelson, a member of the Board of Directors of the Northwestern Michigan Farm Bureau and a newspaperman from down state will give the keynote address. The Thursday morning session is a surprise and a tour has been planned for sometime Wednesday with a chaice of places to see.

Vapers will be conducted each night and there will be organized recreation under an experience recreation person and on Wednesday night Mrs. Bradley from Traverse City who has worked with the State Department with people from foreign lands will speak. It will be a grand camp and one that none of you will want to miss. If you wish to go for the day and would like a meal there, send or call in a reservation.

Coming Events for June — June 11, Wednesday — County Board at 8:30 p.m. at Carl Conant. June 17, Tuesday — F. B. Women will meet with the Elk Rapids community Group at the home of Mrs. Anna R. Baird. June 22-25 — Midwest Training School at Purdue U., Lafayette, Indiana — Mr. and Mrs. Charles Edson, Ellsworth, will attend from our county.

Longest and Best

TOURIST SEASON FOR WEST MICHIGAN

Prospects for the "longest and best" tourist season for West Michigan "never were better", according to Chester C. Wells, secretary-manager of the West Michigan Tourist and Resort Association.

While there never has been any "official" beginning date for the vacation season in West Michigan, opening of the fishing season has been generally accepted as the start. The April 26 opening for the taking of all species of fish except black bass this year and "exceptionally fine weather conditions since then certainly have provided the incentive needed to give all of Michigan a longer vacation season," Wells remarked.

It was estimated that possibly 80 per cent or more of the resorts of West Michigan were open for business over the Memorial Day week-end, assuring accommodations of any type for anyone seeking them.

At the same time the Michigan department of conservation disclosed that all state parks were open and ready for use. There never has been an official opening date for the parks either, although the season always has been considered from Memorial day to Labor day, with most of the parks open earlier and remaining open later.

Wells based his forecast for a good vacation season on records in his office and reports from other agencies through the 31-county territory served by the association. Records here disclose "a decided increase over any previous year" in the number of inquiries from prospective vacationers. Chambers of commerce and other tourist information offices throughout west Michigan report similar gains. Most resort operators of the region have reported a greater number of reservations than previously at this time and some resorts have reported near-capacity reservations for part of June, an unprecedented situation in other years. There also has been a greater demand for copies of CAREFREE DAYS IN WEST MICHIGAN, the 148-page tourist guide for the territory.

Travel in west Michigan during May has been up, even with the recent oil strike which kept many motorists off the highways, Wells reported. One barometer for travel in the territory is the traffic recorded at Mackinaw City, lower peninsula terminal for the state's Straits of Mackinac carferry service.

Between Jan. 1 and May 15 the number of vehicles carried on the ferries increased 16 per cent over previous high in the 30-year history of the service. The Michigan highway department reports 95,388 motorcars carried, compared with 82,037 in the similar period of 1951, the previous record year.

"We can't crediat the weather the early opening of the fishing season alone for the exceptionally favorable outlook for the tourist business this year," Wells commented. "For 35 years the West Michigan Tourist and Resort Association, which is supported by business houses, resorts and others in the 31 counties of the region, has carried on an unrelenting campaign of promotion that has established the area as one of the nation's most popular vacation territories.

"In addition to the work of our association, there has been the promotion of numerous chambers of commerce, other civic organizations and individual resort operators and business men throughout territory, which has done much to advertise and publicize west Michigan as a vacationland.

"Our combined efforts now are paying off handsomely. Tourism now ranks first among the industries of west Michigan, only because of a determined effort to place it there.

"But we must have good resorts, fine business places, a general hospitable welcome for our guests from everyone and continued promotional efforts to retain our patronage in this highly-competitive industry."

FARM FACTS from your County Agricultural Agent

Ed. Rebman, Co. Agr'l Agent

Two new systems of making hay are interesting a greater number of Charlevoix county farmers than ever before, says Ed Rebman, county agricultural agent.

The two methods are grass silage and chopped hay—sometimes referred to as now-finishing. D. L. Clanhan, of the Michigan State College farm crop department, says that both involve use of the field forage harvester and designed with the main purpose of saving labor and saving quality in the harvested crop.

Agent Rebman agrees with Clanahan that no "best method" for all farms and situations is available. A silo is necessary for the grass silage and a mow-drier for chopped hay, in addition to the field harvester.

The objectives of saving the crop from field spoilage, leaf loss and loss of feeding value are met by both methods. Making grass silage almost completely avoids field spoilage and leaf losses. Mow-finishing helps get the job done before the crop becomes over-mature and takes some of the weather hazard out of the job because field exposure time is reduced.

Mow-finishing of cropped hay enables the operators to have feed of lower fiber, higher protein and higher total digestible nutrients, Clanahan concludes.

Horizontal silos are not new to many Michigan farms, though they have not used extensively in recent years. County agricultural agent Ed Rebman reports a new interest in this method of preserving forage.

The horizonal silo can be used either for permanent or temporary storage for silage. Most horizontal silos are at least partially dug into the ground. Where a side hill is available, the horizontal silo can be constructed.

R. L. Maddex, Michigan State College extension agricultural engineer, advises that some type of material should be used to cover the side walls of permanent horizontal silos. Planks, preferable creosoted, field stones plastered to give a smooth inside surface, and reinforced concrete, serve very well for this purpose.

Location of the silo so that there is surface drainage away from the silo is important. The practice of locating the silo away from the barn in order to obtain the right ground level is being adopted by many farmers. Silage is then fed outside in bunks near the entrance to the horizontal silo.

There is a definite width to height ratio if minium spoilage is to result. About a foot of silage per week should be fed across the face of the silo to prevent excessive spoilage.

Seeding Failures Reduced By Good Cultural Methods

Better seedings in oats and barley are possible by observing a few tips from farm crops specialists at Michigan State College. Good cultural methods, plus a new method of seeding help do the job.

Soil should be right, they say, with a pH (acidity rating) of six or above. Your county agricultural agent can help you check the pH of the soil. If pH is below six, lime should be added, especially for alfalfa. Use 400 pounds of 0-20-20 fertilizer per acre at time of seeding.

The drill should be set so the seed falls behind the disk. Michigan Agricultural Experiment Station tests in 1951 got twice as good a stand when seed fell behind disks as when it fall in front of the disks. When dropped in front, seed was covered too deeply.

Cultipacking after seeding is a valuable practice, too.

Band seeding is a new method of improving seeding in oats and barley. To do it, add a piece of garden hose two and one-half feet long to tubes leading from small seeding attachment, and wire the hose back of the disks so seed falls on top of the ground. It should fall eight inches behind disks to get seed directly above fertilizer for a quick boost in seeding growth.

Band seeding is especially valuable on poor soils or when the season is dry, the farm crops specialists say.

Experiments at East Lansing gave a 43 percent better stand of alfalfa by using band seeding as compared to conventional drill seeding.

Taking time to insure good seeding helps reduce costly failures. Seeding failures result in loss of expensive seed, soil erosion, lack of high quality roughage for livestock and breaking up of planned rotations with reduction in yield of following crops.

Weather Hazards Reduced With New Hay-Harvesting Methods

Newer hay-harvesting methods which reduce weather hazards are becoming more common on Michigan farms, resulting in higher quality hays, according to Karl A. Vary, Michigan State College agricultural economist, who has studied the situation.

The weather problem in field-curing hay to 25 percent or less is obvious. To field-cure hay to a moisture content of 25 percent requires about 15 to 20 hours of sunshine. That means about one and a half to two days of clear weather.

According to U. S. Weather Bureau Records at East Lansing, the probable number of days without rainfall during the first two weeks in June is about two to three days in a row. You can count on about one to two clear days in a row during the second two weeks in June, and three clear days in a row during the first week in July. These figures were compiled by Vary from records from 1918 to 1951.

With a hay crusher the number of hours of sunshine required to field-cure hay is cut to eight to ten. A barn drier will cut hours of sunshine required to six to eight. And farmers who make grass silage need only one to three hours of sunshine to cure their hay.

The dry matter loss for the hay loader method is 24 percent, for the hay crusher it is 21 percent for the barn drier 16 percent, and for grass silage, 15 percent. These dry matter loss figures are from time of cutting until time of feeding.

Home Economics Jottings

For a variation on the hamburger theme, broil the meat topped with tomato slices that have been brushed with garlic butter.

Green tipped bananas are best for cooking—ripe bananas flecked with brown are best for salads and fruit cups. Try baking this fruit by placing it in a well-buttered pan and sprinkling with salt and baking at 375 degrees for 15 to 20 minutes. For variations, bake with brown sugar, molasses or cranberries.

Very dramatic wallpapers with bold patterns are better used on one wall only, or in an alcove, a foyer, around a fireplace or as a panel on a clear space wall.

Peas, beans and lentils fall short of meat in the quality of protenin they possess, but if they are served with eggs, milk or cheese, they can take the place of meat in the meal, say Michigan State College untritionists.

Baked beans will stay piping ht on your next picnic if you sulate the dish with plenty of wspaper wrappings.

Peak Lamprey Runs Expected In Late May or Early June

With peak lamprey runs expected in late May and early June, conservation department plan is to inventory inland waters where one or more lamprey species might be spawing or scarring fish.

Main objective is to determine whether or not the sea lamprey, Great Lakes fish menace in recent years, is becoming established in inland lakes. In past years some fishermen have mistaken other eel-shaped creatures, the brook, silver and chestnut lampreys, for the sea lamprey. The other three are not believed to be especially harmful to fish populations.

Fishermen can assist by reporting lampreys or possible lamprey-scarred fish to the nearest department representative or to Truman T. Guard, Grayling state fish hatchery. Anglers are advised that the sea lamprey is the larger of the four species, with the adult averaging about 18 inches in size. Some may be as long as 30inches.

The department's fisheries research institute has a list of 19 lakes reported possessing the parasitic sea lamprey.

In Mullet lake, for example, the lamprey is believed to have migrated from Lake Huron by way of the Cheboygan river. Reaching the lake, the lamprey is suspected of moving into smaller tributary streams to spawn and then returning to Mullet where conditions may be satisfactor for it to remain and complete its life cycle. Movement pattern may be similar in other lakes.

Forage Crops Backbone Of Dairy Feeding

Better and cheaper grassland crops for pasture and feeding make up the back bone of any livestock program, especially dairy, Dr. Earl Weaver, head of the dairy department at Michigan State college, believes dairymen should study ways for maxmium utilization of forage crops.

Too much of our forage crops put into hay does not carry the maximum nutrients available because of losses due to leaching leaching, leafshattering and other damage. The dairy department head believes farmers would give closer attention to their harvesting problems if they realized more fully the economy of hay and pasture.

Recent studies of the costs of feeding a hundred pounds of total digestible nutrients show that alfalfa-brome pasture cost 29 cents compared with corn grain at 78 cents. When alfalfa was harvested as hay, the cost was only 78 cents compared with oats at $1.38.

Diary cattle can obtain nearly two-thirds of their necessary nutrients from forage crops, Dr. Weave related.

He suggested that dairymen endeavor to attend one of the six regional Grass Day programs being held in Michigan's lower peninsula during June. Local county agricultural agents can give complete information on the events where demonstrations will be held on seeding, harvesting and utilization of forage crops.

Michigan State College authorities remind that grassland Farming does not mean that all or most of the agricultural land be seeded to grass. They believe it should be employed in the farming program to complement the cropping system, so that each acre of land is put to its best use in producing the necessary feed supplies for the livestock maintained on the fam.

Choose Right Time For Small Grain Weed Control Work

Many small grain fields in Michigan can be improved, and in some cases actually saved, by spraying them with 2,4-D to control weeds, says B. R. Churchill of the Michigan State College farm crops department.

Not all species of weeds are controlled by 2,4-D but wild mustards, wild radish, ragweed and lambsquarter are not dificult to kill if the 2,4-D is applied at the right time and in the right amounts.

Small grains, including oats, barley, and wheat are more susceptible to injury from 2,4-D at some stages of growth than at others. Greatest injury comes when seedlings are only two or three inches high. They should not be sprayed at this stage.

When small grains are six to eight inches high, they are rather tolerant to 2,4-D and young weeds are most susceptible, Churchill says. Later the weeds will be more tolerant and difficult to kill.

A maximum on one-quarter to one-half pound acid equivalent per acre should be used. The lower rate would be for the ester formulations of 2,4-D. Your county agricultural agent can explain 2,4-D formulations to you and advise the best type for your weed problem.

If legume seeding is made with the grain crop, the problem becomes more complicated. The salts of 2,4-D rather than the ester formulations should be used at rates not to exceed one-quarter pound acid equivalent per acre if red, alsike, or ladino clover is the legume.

If the seeding is alfalfa, a dinitro selective spray would be safer for the alfalfa than 2,4-D, Churchill recommends. Sweet clover seedings usually will be inpured considerable by either chemical.

Spraying small grain fields containing a sweet clover seeding is not advised.

Small areas of quackgrass can be spot sprayed with the compound TCA and a knapsack sprayer. Such treatment, however, will kill the small grain crop.

The Servicemen's Letter

Hi Fellas:

This is Monday night following Memorial Day. We are just now getting caught up from the extra rush of visitors and also the months end business. The old town sure was full of strangers and old familiar faces this week end. They just seemed to flock in.

Let's see if I can remember some of them. That is, some of them that I just saw and didn't get too much of a chance to talk with. There were Gale and Ervin Murphy, Bob Dixon, Charles Dufore, Dale McWatters, Niles Hill, Ed Lord, Paul Bennett, Richard Rusnell, Clifford Schultz, Bud Strehl, and I guess that's all. If I've missed someone I hereby apologize before you get a chance to rib me about it.

Gale and Ervin Murphy were having a big time together last weekend. It's not too often that the two brothers get a chance to go out together and they were making the most of it.

Dale McWatters informed me that he had been home since the 20th of May on another furlough. It seems that he had so much time stored up that he was threatened with losing some of it so they sent home for another stretch. He's going back to Custer this week.

Ed Lord and Jim Nachazel will be in summer training soon. Jim is scheduled to make an aviation-amphibious cruise as part of his Naval Reserve Officer's Training Corps program at Marquette University, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He will go to Little Creek, Virginia and to Corpus Christi, Texas on this cruise. Jim, who is a sophomore in the Marquette college of engineering, is one of 200 men in the Naval ROTC at the University.

Bud Strehl keeps hopping back and forth between East Jordan and Grosse Isle. Seems as though he must have a pretty good berth just now to get so much time off.

A new man among us this week is Pvt Merle J. Wilson, US 55 272 236, Co E, 86th Inf Regt, 10 th Inf Div, Fort Riley, Kansas. Jack is in the beginning of a 16 weeks basic training course there at Riley. His basic started on May 26th. So far he has had the luck to see the Morris twins. There are a lot more of you men in that camp — look him up and make him at home with you.

We've received a stop mailing order from Charles Dufore who was up to this time down in Sampson AFB, New York. Can it be that he is due for overseas? I'll try to see him and let you all know about it next week.

Here's another notice of change of address with no explanation attached. WOJG Murray R. Nelson, W-2146455, is now with the Casual Officers Section, Personnel Center, Camp Kilmer, New Jersey. Can it be that they are shipping you over again, Murray? Write me and give us the lowdown, will you?

I have information here that Ivan and Herbert Chew have entered the service and are taking basic at Indiantown Gap Military Reservation but I do not as yet have their complete addresses. If anyone can give them to me will you do so. We would like to have them receiving this paper.

A letter from Earl Bennett reads as follows: "I'll drop you a line and let you know where I am now. I've been here in Shepard Air Force Base for ten days now but I just got moved into my permanent squad. Our A & E School starts Wednesday the 28th and lasts for 140 academic days.

'Is there anyone besides Dean McPherson down here at this hot and dusty place? My new address is A/3C Earl R. Bennett, AF 16 404 211, 3751 Stu Trng Sqd, Barracks 880, Sheppard AFB, Texas."

Yes, Earl, there is Ronald B. Kenney over in Sqd 3760, Barracks 764. But I guess he is the only one besides Dean.

Gale Murphy expects to be out in January. He has only about seven months to go now and if they don't take him for overseas duty in the next month he won't get it. Gale says that when he gets out can't come too soon to suit him. He's no 20 year man.

Jake Lundy is now a civilian. He received his discharge on Thursday, May 29th at 1:00 p.m. Jake is staying in Colorado Springs this summer during the resort season. It seems there is lots of work down there this time of the year. Jake expects to be home here in the fall.

It has been reported to me that Norman Beal is in Camp Chaffee, Arkansas taking his basic. I do not have his address for you now but will give it to you next week.

Oh, say, I just remembered that Pete Lundy (Jakes brother) has passed his physical and expects to be called in someime the last of this summer.

Gerald Olson and Albert Chanda will probably get it this summer physicals a short time ago.

to take part in the parade before sometime too. They both passed

Bob Anderson left for San Diego on May 30th. He had time going. He expects to be in Dago for quite a spell now.

Well, That's all for now.

NATURE'S FIBERS PROVIDE COMFORT

Man-made fibers shouldn't dim the homemaker's eyes to some of nature's wonderful fibers, advises Marjorie Eastman, extension specialist in textiles, clothing and related arts for Michigan State College's school of home economics.

The advent of the summer season should increase our appreciation of such a fiber as cotton, Miss Eastman believes. "Think of the impressive qualities we could attribute to cotton." she says. "It stands heat and washing; doesn't melt or strech when ironed; absorbs moisture; and resists alkalis."

Cotton's toughness and durability make it the logical choice yeararound for work clothes, house dresses and many children's garments. Cotton dresses appear in all forms from casual sportswear to festive and expensive evening gowns.

Summer cottons are interesting for their textures, the clothing specialist points out. A variety of weaves and finishes permits any number of pleasing materials.

Smooth, glazed surfaces, as in taffetized cotton prints or chambrays are amang the best sellers. They are shiny and crisp and shed dust and dirt. Make the glaze is guaranteed to be permanent, however.

Embossed fabrics resist crushing and soiling. They make fine play clothes, sun rdesses and street wear. Again, make sure the embossed pattern is permanent.

Any one of a number of cotton materials has a place in the summer wardrobe—calico, gingham pique, denim, and others. Each has its own particular advantage.

A final suggestion offered by Miss Eastman for summer coolness and comfort is the variety of cotton sheers which can be fitted into any warm weather wardrobe.

Political control of Michigan's correction system has bred unrest among inmates at the Southern Michigan Prison at Jackson, according to Garret Heyns, warden at Ionia reformatory and a former corrections commissioner.

Heynes testified to this effect before legislative finance committees at Lansing. Riot damage at the prison exceeded $1,500,000.

His allegation was another "hot potato" tossed into the lap of Governor G. Mennen Williams who, like former Governor Kim Sigler, has advocated more appointive power for the governor to run state government.

As quoted in the press, Heyns said:

"When the director is appointed by the governor and is a political appointee the nerovsness of subordinates cannot be eliminated. It even filters down to the inmates.

Heyns' solution is a return to the five-man corrections commission law whereby prisons were taken out of control of the governor and were run by persons "chosen for the jobs on the basis of their training and experience in corrections work."

An obvious target is Earnest C. Brooks of Holland, Williams' appointee as corrections director. Brooks, a Democrat, is in the insurance business.

The so-called "model" correction law, interestingly enough, was a product of a Democratic governor—Frank Murphy in 1937. It continued on the statute books 10 years until Governor Sigler convinced the legislature that the governor should be responsible. Sigler took great pride in his appointment of a career man, Joseph Sanford, former deputy at Atlanta's federal prison.

When the voters' protest tide against Sigler swept unknown young Williams into the governor's chair, Sanford was promptly replaced by Williams' own appointee, Mr. Brooks. Brooks is a successful business man and a former member of the State Senate. Sanford died in 1951.

The situation thus has some contradictory aspects. Heynes criticizes political control of prisons through a Democratic governor's appointment of a one-man commission. His solution is a return to a model law inaugurated by a Democratic governor. If a Republican legislature agrees with his recommendation, it will be admitting its error in accepting a Republican governor's solution: One-man control. And so it does.

Who's right? Who's wrong? In the game of politics the answer depends largely on which side of the party fence you happen to be. So roll your own!

It is comparatively easy to create and build up a new department in state government, once the legislature accedes to public pressure and appropiates money to hire manpower.

It is quite another thing, however, to get the equivalent of results through co-ordination of existing governmental agencies.

An illustration at point is Michigan's civil defense program, a new postwar activity of state government. Last year this department spent $1,973,000, one million dollars of which went for blood typing. For this year's budget the governor asked $3,000,000, a good 50 per cent more. The legislature, trying to cope with a rising state deficit, granted only $271,575.

Gen. Lester J. Maitland, civil defense director, has practically shelved ambitious plans to continue blood typing for an atomic disaster, expand the ground observer plan, buy fire trucks and medical supply trucks and set up special programs for key areas such as the Soo Locks.

By dire necessity he is now resorting to an appeal to existing state agencies for coordination. The health and highway departments, for example, are asked to help carry some of the load through their own manpower and funds.

Another illustration is the state department for economic development. Here is a super-chamber of commerce, fathered by former Governor Sigler, to help build business and industry in Michigan.

Government again intervened to supplant private leadership and private action, and all at the taxpayers' expense. The test of a new state agency, as we see it, is this: Is it needed? Can we afford it? Are we getting our money's worth?

A tax brevity: The state constitution says, in effect, that the legislature shall balance the budget. But Gov. Williams vetoed $18,000,000 of the Republican $28,500,000 program, creating a defict of some $20,000,000 to be tacked on to the $65,000,000 accumulated deficit.

Who is now responsible for the unbalanced budget — Governor Williams or the Legislature?

Sen. Frank Andrews (R-Hillman) says, "My position is to vote no on any attempts to balance the budget. We did our legislative duty and the governor vetoed it. He won't get a chance to veto the beer tax, for it's coming up."

Sen. Leo H. Roy (R-Hancock) said, "We won't solve any of our problems until we bounce Williams — He's just a jinx."

C. J. McNeill, legislative comptroller says quietly, "They've authorized expenditures of more than $300,000,000. That's law and you know it as well as I. Their only answer is to find more money—somewhere."

Governor Williams' solution is simple and familiar. Distribute the wealth by taxing employers' profits. FDR applied this principle of European socialism nearly 20 years ago. He called it the "New Deal."

A by-product of increased taxes and government spending, both impelled in part by the cost of World War II and the present cold war against communism, is inflation. Socialism and inflation go hand in hand.

The aveage hourly rate of Detroit production workers last March was 2.04. A 40-hour workweek meant earnings of $81.60 — as an AVERAGE! That is inflation.

If further priming of the inflation pump is effected in 1952 under political direction, the illusion of good times will be even greater.

Governor Williams' greatest trump card is his championship of the under-dog, the "common man" whose welfare he would improve, at every opportunity, primarily at the expense of the profits of "big business' and under the illusion of prosperity.

It is a political mirage hard to overcome.

And the Republican legislative leaders know it!

If Michigan has more deficits, vetoed "consumer tax" bills, or who's to blame? The governor who the legislature which "refuses" to tax employers' profits? The show-down is just about at that level. Take your choice.

The elderly stock broker, age 75, carried his 19-year old bride over the threshold. He introduced her to his household staff, and later asked his chauffeur what he thought of the new mistress. The chauffeur replied, "She's a beautiful young lady, sir, but I hate to see a man start out on a day's work so late in the afternoon."

Early Opening Argued

Up and down Michigan trout streams on the opening week-end fishermen argued: Had the early opening on inland lakes taken some of the pressure off the trout streams? Or did you hold with the school that contended trout fishermen couldn't ever be wooed away from the thrill of that long-awaited opening week end?

From our own survey the opening day parade looked just about as long and populous as ever, but that's not the real test. The next month will probably show slackening interest in trout because anglers will be diverted to lakes closer to home—at least that's the belief of our Conservation Department's fish division. And thus the terrific drain on Michigan trout will be somewhat relieved.

Put-And-Take Planting

Just how severe this drain has become can be dramatically demonstrated by the heavy planting program required to keep trout fishermen happy today. In our so called "put-and-take" system, about 250,000 legal-sized trout are planted just before the season opens. The fish are well scattered over hundreds of miles of streams. A surprisingly large percentage of them are caught on the opening week end. During the balance of the season another 750,000—all 7" or better—are planted, and they, too, are over-anxious to take flies or bait cast their way.

Costly Project

It costs real money to hatch a trout, raise him to legal length, transport him from the hatcheries and release him in a stream that may be many miles away. The figure is said to be about 40c per fish. On a million-fish basis the bill is a little alarming—$400,000.

Whatever fisheries experts think of the idea is neither here nor there. Sportsmen apparently demand it. Resort operators like it, too. So it's likely to continue for awhile. The day may come however, when the picture will change, and we'll go back to nature's way of maintaining fish populations.

New Rules Point Way

Sometime in the not too far distant future many of our best trout streams may be restricted to fly-fishing only. The new regulations for 1952 point the way. With fly-fishing-only allowed in certain streams, and the limit cut to an adequate ten per day our elaborate and costly trout-planting program may gradually become unnecessary. The money saved may be spent more wisely on stream improvement necessitated by erosion resulting from over-zealous lumber operations. That's where man can help nature. But when it comes to helping nature maintain trout population by raising and releasing a million fish a year, man fails to meet the challenge in more ways than one. If you don't believe it, compare the flavor of a hatchery-reared trout and one of nature's children of the [illegible] you'll be surprised!
